

Week 5 接続詞7

I gently explained that most people die when they are either very old or very sick and that since I was young and healthy, I wasn't going to die for a long time.

8

The study of Latin will train your mind. Latin is somewhat unlike English in the form of its words and much unlike English in the order of words in its sentences. You will therefore be obliged to look carefully, and to think carefully, and to speak carefully whenever you try to read and to translate anything written in Latin. This close attention will train your powers of observation, of clear thinking, and of clear expression.

Week 6 準動詞 ①:不定詞

9

To learn and master the English language thoroughly and, consequently, to be able to really appreciate English literature, it is necessary not to view it as something universal, but rather to have a clear understanding of the Englishman's character.

Point 4 to V の識別

- ① To comply with the law is everyone's duty.
- ② I have no one to discuss the matter with.
- ② He must be losing his mind to act like that.

10

How can you tell good writing from bad writing? Actually, it's easier than you think. The good writer knows the tricks of his trade and uses them to make you, the reader, think and feel the way he wants you to; the bad writer, since he doesn't know his business, never really touches your mind or heart.
